KEYS HISTORY & DISCOVERY CENTER PRESENTS

ENDANGERED SAWFISH OF THE FLORIDA KEYS

Presented By

Tonya Wiley

President, Havenworth Coastal Conservation

Sawfish are large shark-like rays that used to be relatively common in Florida waters including the Keys. Today, Florida's sawfish are endangered, and scientists are striving to learn as much as possible about this iconic and fascinating fish. Join Havenworth Coastal Conservation President Tonya Wiley as she discusses her work on the conservation biology studies of sawfish since 2001, including research on the endangered smalltooth sawfish in Florida, and how she became an authority on the biology and ecology of the species.

Join us to see a three-foot sawfish replica, feel some real sawfish rostra (saws), and get some great sawfish swag. During her presentation Wiley will bring you interesting facts about sawfish, updates on current research projects, explanations of management tools such as the Endangered Species Act, descriptions of ways you can be involved in the recovery of sawfish, and other information about the unique and endangered smalltooth sawfish.
